The layoffs of thousands of teachers and school staff in Los Angeles are a part of a national attack on the most important democratic gain in America, the right to universal public education. The young people in Los Angeles who have been a part of student-led boycotts, walkouts, and marches to oppose the layoffs are the leaders of a new civil rights movement. This wave of layoffs is not the end of the attack. If not defeated, these attacks will lead to greater segregation and inequality. The ability of the youth of Los Angeles to mobilize independently is impressive and necessary, but more organization and collective understanding is required to win. That is the purpose of this conference. If you want to be a leader of the new civil rights movement attend this conference. Together we can win!
